			are taken care of by civilian security companies, supported by the police units present and by regional civil servants in some regional airports. Police tasks remain in the hands of police units exclusively: when security staff intercepts illegal immigrants for example, police officers will take over. Also in the ports of Oostende and Zeebrugge, the United Kingdom Border Agency is present on a daily basis with technical means - such as CO2 detection - or detection dog teams for checks on departures towards the U.K. Technical detection equipment is also being used on port terminals by private surveillance agencies in the prevention of criminal activity in general, and illegal migration in particular (CCTV, CO2-detection, heart beat detection, passive millimetric wave). Upon detection of any (possible) suspect, police border guards are being informed and will take over.
